

I OFFER FREE TREATMENT To Victims of These Diseases— — —

Princess Louise, the second daughter of the late King Leopold, seems without question to be the black sheep of the family. She once went a carriage to the frontier to meet her mother at the time of her father's death, placing at her disposal the services of a General and a lackey of the court, that she might have the proper escort to her husband, yet she must have felt herself like a fish out of water in that gathering of relatives. With most of them she had no contact for many years. Among them was her own son, who has had absolutely nothing to do with his mother since she ran away with a man who was not even her son-in-law, who also has ignored her very existence since he married her daughter, 16 years ago; then her sister, Empress Elizabeth, who had only a short time ago announced that she was glad that she was forever estranged from her sister on account of her scandalous goings-on, to say nothing of the opinion which she had expressed that she did not know the new King and his family held for her. In spite of all this, however, King Albert, wishing, if possible, to make a man of his daughter, and her manner of living, and to change her into harmonious relations with the rest of the family, offered her an allowance and a comfortable household in Brussels, with a suitable household, and she refused to do so. The Princess Louise was not present at her father's funeral nor at any of the more important events of his life, his death, and his funeral. At his decease, but left the city on an ordinary train not long after her interview with King Albert. It is well known that this royal princess has been everywhere, where, and that she has tried in every way to borrow money to pay off her most persistent creditors. Of her portion of the $3,000,000 which Leopold left her, she has not received a cent. It is said that $600,000 have already been handed over to these, and that the lawyer acting for her husband, Prince Philip of Coburg, has seized the money and has refused to pay it, having furnished his former wife with $400,000 to pay her bills at the time they separated. She is therefore justly entitled to the money, and it is supposed to be new in search of some person willing to reimburse her, but as she can no

Change your mustache to a rich brown or black with

National Bank building nearing completion, churches and high school, public improvements, as ice plant, electric light plant and waterworks, are we not justified in our faith?

There can be no doubt regarding the value of our investments, and when we remember that St. Cloud is our town, and its destiny is in our keeping, is it not the part of wisdom that we make all effort to write success on its pages?

—A. H. Kinney, Secretary, St. Cloud, Fla.

Wants to Find Them.

Augustus Peno, Box 468, Woodburn, Ore., belonged to the 76th Ill., who he wounded at Jackson, Miss., and who he temporarily recovered so as to return to his regiment, he was discharged later on account of disability, and he would be very glad to hear from any comrades of his old regiment.

KINGHAM'S DYE

IN FIRST

Change your mustache to a rich brown or black with

50 CENTS
A BOTTLE